The way you live your life is a logical consequence of your experience in life so far. Man has evolved from being a mere animal into a human being capable of understanding the reasons for the things that happen to him. A system of philosophical values should also exist so that man can learn to understand the reasons for being alive. [However, it should not be argued that man's life is based on a system of philosophically rational values because his life is based on values for health, personal freedom, art, and so on.] The basic elements of art are the painterly ability to communicate with others. From the time man discovered that he was able to use color to express himself, he began to develop forms of self-expression that enabled him to express himself creatively. Human ingenuity has developed such diverse arts as painting, dance, music, theater, sculpture, and poetry into a complex art form. The role of art in our life should not be underestimated. It is one of the main sources of inspiration for us and a major means of communication among humans. While art is generally linked to the realm of the mind, no doubt it is also a product of our material existence. In the material sphere, art exists in the form of sculpture, architecture, and other forms that influence our material existence. As long as we live in society, our appreciation of art will change. But we need art to express our feelings and to immortalize our achievements. Every human being is creative to some extent, but not all of us have the artistic abilities to convey our thoughts. Artful expressions reflect our personality and our cultural background, but they are only reflections of our inner self and our surroundings. A person's creative abilities will generally improve with age. Thus, culture can stimulate creativity in some individuals and hinder creativity in others. Culture also influences creativity in a subtle way through social conventions or norms. There are certain
