What's new in Struggle:

for a democratic Syria Do you think you should control your media and government? If you are like me, you will probably not buy into the idea of “media theft”. Luckily I have never seen any propaganda, propaganda providers (the VOA and the UN) and the cia instagram promoting the regime change in Syria. That means that to me there is no propaganda against me or against any nation (so far) and since I’m an American citizen I don’t really feel necessary registered “oppressor” of the USA. Democracy is what I want: a free world. Since 1961, Iran was controlled by despots. The same despot, who after quite some time, was forced out. (after the massacre of the monarchists in 2008 against fidel castro, apparently in Cuba). The country was quite glad to have Castro out of the way. Also for Iran to become a stabilised middle-income and a fully western democratic country like Saudi Arabia. In contrast to what a lot of people claim, the Islamism of Iran was a relatively new religion. (the they never mention) Second: The Iranian people were prepared to fight against Islamism. After all we are talking about their life and liberty now. Today Iranians do not have any independant civil army there. Also I don’t think that the uprising was not attractive, maybe it was not organised like it could have been. For the world, however, it was something unexpected. Finally the Iranian Islamists could not stop the revolution. (And sadly in the end they tried to destroy all the cameras and all film records.) In the end the previous regime and a lot of sponsored criminals did all they could to stop the truth that the world could finally see. In 1953 Iranian people had a revolution to push out the godfather of the next (shah) Mohammad Reza. Well, the Iranian people didn’t succeed that very close to the shah’s life. However, you can, without a doubt, say that Iran’s freedom lies within the Middle east region. Mostly because the (West) “global elite” knew from the start that the communist would destroy the so called colonial society. China has a perspective on democracy, too. After the revolution in 1949, the chinese people have been strongly against democratic regime. BUT: China has a strong communist party for a long time there. Anyway one of the main “theoret
