The G20 group has issued a statement on Friday condemning yesterday's attacks at four sites in Turkey, which claimed the lives of more than 200 and injured hundreds more, making this the biggest attack of the ongoing political upheaval across the country. "We are deeply saddened by the recent terrorist attacks in Turkey. These attacks have once again shown that all countries must reject the pernicious ideology that leads to terrorism, violence and death. We strongly condemn the vicious terrorist attacks in Turkey and stand firmly with our Turkish allies," the group said. The statement also noted that the G20 would continue to support Turkey's "efforts to restore stability and strengthen democratic institutions, the rule of law and the fight against terrorism." Last week, Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdoğan was quoted by BBC as saying that the PKK, PKK affiliates or terrorist organizations "do not have any place" in Syria and that Turkey will be targeting the YPG, Syrian Kurds' all-female wing, in northern Syria. PKK statement: "The Kurdistan Freedom Hawks (TAK) is confirming the elimination of the Turkish military and security forces in Operation Olive Branch in Afrin and adjacent areas, as well as the elimination of Turkish Army and police cadets and its allies in Operation Peace Spring in southeastern Turkey." "The PKK and its terror organizations will continue to target Turkish security and military forces, anyone who defends this struggle and the freedom of the Kurdish people inside the country and abroad will be targeted, the PKK will continue its terror against the Turkish state, which is trying to repress them, their attacks will keep happening, the PKK will keep resisting Turkish oppression." "The PKK and its terror organizations will continue to target Turkish security forces, any organization or individual who supports this struggle will be targeted and whoever leaves for the northern Syria, in a state of war, will be targeted. As for the days of the state of war with the PKK, one state will be created, and whoever is against this will be targeted. The results of the elections will be changed, Turkey's [majority] will be changed, they will be part of the changed Turkey. From the people there will be people there." Operation Olive Branch began on Wednesday as part of Turkey's ongoing campaign to eliminate the Syrian Kurdish militants, who it says it sees as terrorists. The operation came days after the Turkish parliament passed a bill that allows the military to launch cross-border attacks against PKK, its allied groups and People's Protection Units, YPG, from within

A: Not even knowing what you are trying to do with Eclipse, I would just log out and restart. However, if your working on a project that you want to keep open and closed then try this: Click on "Shut Down" in the top right of the Eclipse IDE. Click on "Save Workspace As..." Enter a name in the title field and select your home directory Save as on the top of the right hand window. Close Eclipse. Open Eclipse as normal. Your workspace will be listed on the left hand window. Click on it and then click Open Project. You will now be able to select the project. A: I removed the.ecore folder in ~/.eclipse and restarted eclipse now it works fine. Q: Add property from class template to class without knowing instance of class template at compile time I have the following class: template class Foo { public: T x; }; What I want to do, is to add the type std::initializer_list to my template in a non-member way. The reason I want to do this is, I want to hide the fact that I have that type in my class. I also want to later on use std::initializer_list on my class, without having to cast it (since I don't want to make any other changes to the class). #include template class Foo { public: Foo(std::initializer_list); }; template Foo::Foo(std::initializer_list arg) { std::initializer_list lst = arg; } This does not compile though.
