For Windows 10, Windows 8, Windows 7. Billionaire Bill Gates has warned that income inequality in the United States “is creating a situation where democracy doesn’t work very well”. In an interview to be published in the September issue of TIME magazine, the Microsoft co-founder said the US became complacent about the rise of income inequality and the country failed to take adequate steps to fight it. “We didn’t realise it was this big and so we haven’t had an effective response,” Gates said. “The top 1 per cent (in income) now takes about half the income in the United States.” His comments come less than a week after the World Economic Forum’s annual meeting in Davos, where the world’s business, political and media leaders are gathered to consider the state of the global economy and social inequality, as reported by FT. “I think the combination of income inequality and the political process is creating a situation where democracy doesn’t work very well,” Gates said. Gates said the rising inequality was a “cause for concern” for him, and that he hoped steps would be taken to address the issue. The CEO and founder of Microsoft, who has an estimated net
