Argentina's government on Thursday announced a nationwide quarantine to contain the coronavirus and said a British visitor would be the first person to be infected inside its borders. The country has been battling the virus since March 22, and it has so far been spread to 39 people in Argentina, according to the government. Argentina's minister of social development, Carolina Stanley, said the quarantine would be voluntary. "It's a decision that will allow people to be quarantined at home or in hospitals, if they have a fever or other symptoms, until March 31, the date of the next round of demonstrations," she said during a news conference. There were no reports of coronavirus-related deaths in Argentina. A British man was the first person to test positive for the virus after being diagnosed in the country. He is the third British person to test positive for the virus. However, the government has since said there are 23 other British people confirmed to have the virus. A British national who was previously quarantined in Argentina has now also been discharged and is expected to be back at work later this week, the government said. The British Embassy in Argentina said Thursday night it was "aware of reports that a British national has been diagnosed with COVID-19." The embassy has been working with the government and the British man's friends to "ensure that he is well," it said. The government of Andalusia in Spain, which borders Italy, said earlier this week it had found a British-Italian citizen, believed to be traveling from Venice, who had tested positive for the virus.

FIFA is a football simulation game series created by EA Canada since 1992. Since the launch of the series in FIFA '92, the game has won over 30 Game of the Year Awards. FIFA is the definitive football experience for any platform on the market, and the most-played sports game of all time. Who Am I Playing As? You, or a player from the club you support. With more than 700 million footballers from over 200 countries being simulated in the game, there are so many possible combinations. FIFA lets you play in every country, age group and position. How Are They Made? Every FIFA player is carefully created with a detailed model of the player, specific animations, and hundreds of different face animations. Once they're in-game, they are passed through our pipeline to be rendered, match optimised and put through numerous play tests. The final product is a video game player that is so realistic that the National Football Teams use this technology to create their World Cup rosters. What Makes This Game So Special? FIFA's gameplay is driven by fundamental changes we've made for the first time in the series. Our Season Mode now starts with a new, more advanced Career Mode where you're presented with more game-like decisions and distractions, all with the ultimate goal to keep you engaged and enthralled. New Traits Traits are core elements of your player that influence their gameplay style. You can choose what your player has, and choose how it will impact his game. Traits include speed, power, agility, composure, vision, physique, skills, technical, speed, and more.
