You can say goodbye to these fixed characters and decide what kind of character you’d like to play in the game. [...] The experience is so unique that I look forward to the next update.” -Kotaku “Overall, I think Elden Ring is an excellent RPG. [...] This is the first time I’ve experienced a game in which you decide how your character looks and plays. [...] The game has a high level of replay value thanks to its myriad features.” -PCGamer “Elden Ring is an excellent RPG. And while there are very few RPGs that take place in the far future, the themes of duty and destiny in the game are great.” -Engadget “While Elden Ring does lack many of the key functions of traditional RPGs, it does a fantastic job of focusing on the story and creates a world that feels rich and full of possibilities. There’s also a great deal of attention given to the presentation, which creates a wonderful atmosphere for its story. It’s a great value for one price.” -IGN “...it’s obvious the developers had a lot of fun with it” -Trendy-Gaming.com “The game is very well-balanced and great, I highly recommend you buy it.” -Gaming-Cafe.net “[Elden Ring] has been kind enough to put the focus on pleasing the user and the game has been more than successful.” -Metro-Gaming.com

“At the beginning, I was a little disappointed by the game’s controls and some of the game’s interface, and the entire theme felt a bit too weird. But as I got to know the game’s mechanics and the world’s lore, I was pleasantly surprised at how much the game and its world grew on me.” –YouJizz THE NEW FANTASY ACTION RPG. Q: Is there a way to do partial updates in PostgreSQL? I have a large table with about 90 columns that I want to update only ~10% of the data. This is a one-shot query so I'd prefer not to rewrite the query and execute it again. PostgreSQL doesn't seem to provide a mechanism to do this. It does have the LOAD DATA command that can accept various load schemas and destination tables but I think I have my data stored in one table and want to update a specific column value in all rows. I'd appreciate if someone has experienced this before and come up with a work-around for this. I'm fairly certain this would be a common scenario so hopefully it's already been done once.

A: You could use a function to calculate the value you're seeking and then run a SELECT with an EXISTS or JOIN to figure out which rows to update.
