Photographers whose work does not need reference images have the .The integration of the transcriptional activators GAL4 and VP16 into intact HIV-1 genomes. A function for the HIV-1 transactivator Tat is to enhance the transcription of the provirus from the HIV-1 LTR. Here we show that the gammaretroviral transcriptional activator GAL4 also can enhance the expression of viral genes by direct interaction with the proximal LTR. Cationic charges on the C-terminal domain of GAL4 are required for transcriptional activation. In transient assays with 293 cells, GAL4 causes a concentration-dependent stimulation of LTR-driven transcription that is mediated by a sequence on the LTR that is closely linked to the transactivating function of Tat. Cotransfection of GAL4 with an HIV-1 proviral DNA, which contains a deletion between the LTR and the transcription unit of gag and env genes, is also strongly stimulated. We demonstrate that the DNA sequence on the proviral DNA that can interact with GAL4 is bound by a sequence-specific DNA binding protein, TFIIB-related factor 2. This protein, which can bind GAL4, is also required to maintain both the concentration-dependent and the transactivating function of GAL4 on the viral DNA. We propose that the interaction of GAL4 with a site on the viral DNA can act to enhance the expression of the provirus. Variation in the chromo-helicase d DNA-binding protein in the hyperthermophilic archaeon, Sulfolobus solfataricus. The chromo-helicase d DNA-binding protein (CHD) is the prominent binding protein in the archaeal nucleoid. It is an evolutionarily related protein to the eukaryotic nucleosome core histones, which also bind the DNA in the nucleosome. The archaeal CHD is either tetrameric or hexameric, depending on the organism. The hexameric form of Sulfolobus solfataricus CHD (soCHD) was purified and shown to bind to the S. solfataricus lac operon in vivo. The crystal structure of soCHD was solved 6d1f23a050
