Photo: Alex Wroblewski/Getty Images If the Reds ever have the cash to compete on the international stage, using the Far East as a home base makes sense. It is where the world’s major tournaments — the Olympics, the World Cup, the Asian games — are held. For Premier League clubs, the Asian tournament is lucrative. Manchester City is the only team that makes regular trips to Asia, on the back of a Champions League win in 2011. However, an Asian base would not be required to qualify for the World Cup, so a move there, for one or even multiple clubs, wouldn’t be a likely destination for Premier League. The last time the world’s top leagues met in the Asian tournament, both Scotland and England failed to qualify. The Champions League is the biggest money-spinner for Premier League clubs. But it has only two lucrative revenue streams: TV money and Champions League qualifying fees. The Premier League TV deal is worth £4.442 billion and is split evenly between the clubs. The minimum television deal is £6.4 million. So, for every £1 a Premier League club makes, the TV broadcasters make £2.5. Right now, according to Deloitte, the average transfer fee between Europe and Asia for a British 6d1f23a050
