Stata's hardening of the Stata software environment has had a profound effect on the growth of Stata. It makes the execution of Stata code faster, but it has also made it much harder to exploit bugs in Stata. Many researchers who successfully obtained Stata's source code found that the hardening and subsequent changes were very effective in fixing bugs. In addition, Stata has been the target of numerous malicious attacks due to vulnerabilities uncovered in Stata that expose users to an increased risk of viruses. It's entirely possible that Stata will become the target of a well-coordinated and sophisticated exploit attempt. Adequate protection is the best defense. Practically, the most efficient way to guarantee that Stata works properly in your personal environment is to use Stata release (Rel) 13 or 14. If you find yourself with a Stata version lower than this, you're encouraged to download and install a recent Stata release. Just for reference, Stata release 10.5, 11.0, 12.0, 13.0, and 14.0 are backwards compatible. Stata release 14.1 and 14.2 are not compatible with Stata release 10.5 or Stata release 11.0. If you use Stata release 10.5 or Stata release 11.0, it's most efficient to work with Stata release 13.3 or 14.0. Stata 14 and 13 are a great software, which have many new features and useful for making great maps. It can easily deal with large datasets and give you the answers you want.
