Since the boat is upside down, the bags won't touch the sides of the boat. Step 3: Let the bags soak for 24 hours After all the bags are loaded, tie the bottom two to the stem. Before submerging the boat, make sure that everything is kept in place. Top tip: To keep the sections of the vessel from separating, you can add a bit of weight to the bag to help the sections from breaking apart. Step 4: Fill up the vessel to 85% with water After 24 hours, this is where we want to stop the fermentation. You want the bag to float and stay in place without breaking. It's normal for the bag to move a bit after fermentation. You can do this by putting a bit of weight on it. Water the boat every day, at least 3 days a week. Step 5: Fill the boat with food The bag floating on water is like the ingredients for fermentation, and the bacteria can work on that ingredients. The best option is to cover the bag with a plastic bag or a cloth. It will slow down the fermentation process, and keep the fermentation from getting out of control. Step 6: Fill up the boat with water One more thing you should consider is the water temperature. It should be below 50 6d1f23a050
