There's a random customer inside. I have to use this card or that card.? A: The sentence is not grammatically correct. It should be written as There is no one around. There is a random customer inside. I have to use this card or that card. If you want to say that there are two options, then you could use and or. For example: There's no one around. There's a random customer inside. I have to use this card or that card. But, both and and or can be used with a single noun. The sentence you provided is confusing because you have a plural noun at the beginning of your sentence. That makes it sound like there are multiple options. When you say There's is a noun there, you're describing a collection of things. For example: There is a dog in the room. There is a banana in the room. Q: Different Attributes of Aussilien and Austrialien? Is there a difference between the Aussilien and Austrialien vowel systems, or is the difference just in the treatment of vowels? A: Is there a difference between the Aussilien and Austrialien vowel systems, or is the difference just in the treatment of vowels? You can clearly see the difference between the two systems in the following table. Note: The German vowel charts are not meant to be completely exhaustive lists of all the possible sounds in German, but rather they represent the vowel distribution of various dialects. Also, the original and most comprehensive German dictionary by Martin Lückel, published by Otto Harrassowitz Verlag, contains more than 45

Code: #include class string { public: string(char const *); char const * data; string(string const&); }; int main() { string s; s = "abc"; cout size = (d.size() + 1); } string::string(string const & s) { data = (s.data); this->size = s.size; } Output: [ab] 13 ab This is no surprise, if I debug, the constructors are not called. What I want to do: (1) string s1; (2) s1 = s2; (3) cout 6d1f23a050
